Evidence from psychology, neuroscience, and psychiatry has shed light on the functional role and physiology of actual hallucinations. The second strand is the development of a philosophical theory of perception known as disjunctivism. Some disjunctivist theories have as part of their ontology a radically new and different conception of hallucination.

The philosophy of perception is concerned with the nature of perceptual experience and the status of perceptual data, in particular how they relate to beliefs about, or knowledge of, the world. Any explicit account of perception requires a commitment to one of a variety of ontological or metaphysical views. Philosophers distinguish internalist accounts, which assume that perceptions of objects ...
